

The Final Phase: School development nears completion

The final phase of work at the school is now nearing completion and a new classroom block will be in use from September 2011.

The work forms an important part of the council's plans to modernise and redevelop the school from two to four forms of entry, meaning that there will be four classes in each year. This will help to meet the demand for pupil places in the area.

Completion of this, the final phase of works, will complete the Coleridge Primary School expansion project that started back in 2007.

The work for this important part of the project includes:

- a new art room (above) and extension to the staff room (see left)
- two new classrooms
- two new resource rooms
- new toilet facilities
- refurbishment of two existing classrooms and toilets
- improvements to the staff car park

The new classroom block and the two refurbished / adapted classrooms will be completed in the next few weeks. These spaces will feature an interactive white board with internet facilities.

Although there were delays in handing over the refurbished toilets, these issues have now been resolved.

Work in Progress at Coleridge

Building contractors Jerram Falkus, the school, and council would like to thank pupils, parents and residents for their patience during the building work. Below are some images of the project as it nears completion.

Latest News:

Coleridge Primary School has won a Civic Trust Award. The project was described as a 'well-designed and sensitively handled extension to an existing listed building, allowing the expansion of the primary school. The judges said that: this vibrant school provides creative learning spaces which enhance experience and encourage aspiration'. The school and the council worked closely with Nicholas Hare Architects on the project.
