	of black industrial labour, in the 19th century they began with black colonial seamen. The Tiger Bay community faced official, as well as everyday physical harassment that culminated in the 1919 race riots and a scheme for repatriation. The people of Butetown lived through the Depression in the 1930s and many of them served and died in World War Two. Since the 1950s they have come to share the broader experience of the newer black communities. (Adults)

She helped him become the UK's No.1 Variety star as well as being the toast of the West End nightclub set.  However, following a scandalous, racially motivated libel case the BBC banned his records, despite his popularity and talent.  This is a play to challenge the UK's continuing failure to recognise a man who journalist Kathryn Flett pointed out "would surely be a household name, if it wasn't for the colour of his skin."

Brief Description:	A film about the black community in Ladbroke Grove and Notting Hill that grew up in the 1950s. "No Irish, no coloured, no dogs" read the rooms-to-let signs in what was already a decaying inner area of London. In the Grove black people had to face the brunt of a crude and brutal racism and a grassroots defence was organised against white racist attacks in 1958, to become part of the more general community resistance. That strength reflected in the emergence of several major Black Power organisations. Since the 1960s the vital sense of black community which developed in the Grove has resisted attempts to disperse and weaken the community and in particular the attempt to suppress the annual Carnival - the major African-Caribbean event in Britain. Brief Description:	Join us for our monthly reminiscence session for older people – just come along, enjoy a cup of tea and share your memories.  70 years ago, the Empire Windrush brought the first wave of Commonwealth citizens to these shores. They came with hope of good employment and the expectation that they were needed by a country desperate to rebuild after the devastation of war. How far were hopes and expectations realised? How did they adjust to the very different culture and climate they found here? And what were their experiences? How did people respond to their new neighbours, health workers, churchgoers and work colleagues? What do you remember about that time and what were your experiences?

Brief Description:	A Common History underlines the fact that the 'new' black communities consist of workers from different countries in Asia and the Caribbean joined in the same struggles against racism in Britain since World War Two. The film focuses on

	discrimination in employment against black workers, looking particularly at the 1974 dispute at Imperial Typewriters in Leicester. Here black workers faced opposition not only from the bosses, but from some Trade Unions as well as fellow white workers. The film links the outrage of young black people (many born in Britain) as seen in the dramatic events of summer 1981, in relation to the disappointed hopes of their migrant-worker parents. This film is of historical interest but the issues raised are still relevant today. (Adults)

Brief Description:	The Hidden History of Africa Before the Slave Trade is a visually stunning presentation that explores one key question: What history do black people have before the slave trade started? The lecture discusses the Empire of Mali, the Yoruba Kingdoms, Medieval Sudan, Medieval Ethiopia and the East African Coast. These civilisations have left behind a splendid array of evidence, discussed in the lecture. Evidence includes wonderful artefacts, illuminated manuscripts and impressive architecture. A discussion will follow the presentation.
